Heavy tanks are powerful, ungainly tanks – the heavy tanks of World War II – with huge treads and huge guns, and their primary role is to overwhelm the opposition with sheer weight of metal and firepower. In Armored Warfare, players start with a relatively quick and agile vehicle – the IS-3 light tank – and when they purchase a Premium time, they obtain a Heavy (Tier 1) tank, of which there are two types, the IS-5 and the T-34/85. The player can switch to Heavy tanks at Tier 3, with the T-44 and ISU-152 following at Tier 4, and the ISU-152P and ISU-152MM being the final heavy vehicle to join the game. A series of major balance changes have occurred since the appearance of Heavy tanks at Tier 2. The T-34/85 was introduced with Tiers 1-4 at once, T-34/85 (P) and ISU-152 (MM) were added in Tier 3 and finally, the ISU-152P and ISU-152MM were introduced in Tier 4. Since then, the game has completely overhauled the overall balance of the Heavy and Super Heavy tanks and certain game features have been tuned as well. This content will allow you to get acquainted with the tanks of Tier 1 to Tier 4. You will be able to: learn their stats, equipment, pictures, videos, unlock content and much more. You will also have access to unique Premium vehicles, including the following: As a starting vehicle, players can choose between the IS-3 light tank and T-44, with both variants available at Tier 1. IS-3 (HT) and T-44 (HT) will be added at Tier 2. ISU-152MM, ISU-152MM (UGI) and ISU-152MM (FL) - Tier 3 heavy tanks ISU-152P, ISU-152 (MM) - Tier 4 heavy tanks The IS-5 and T-34/85 were added with Tiers 1-3. The T-44 will be added with Tiers 4-5 The T-34/85 is the main heavy tank of the Soviet super-heavy (T-34/85 (MM) only), but it has a very slow speed, low hit points and fragile structure. Fav Games : Comments Comments I can somewhat agree that the 2S25 S-Antiaircraft Gun was a little bit better in many areas than the T-155 Igla. When you bear in mind that the SPG is for flanking, and the Igla is for pointdefensive use, the Igla is definitely better. The M2 Carriage has an armored front. But when the carrier comes out of the gate, it also comes out of the queue. The M2 design was born in a time where the USSR was still a THIRD WORLD country, and the US had a substantial fleet of superes game carriers. While the Japanese chose not to have the same type of carrier. The Taiwanese and Vietnamese chose the corvette for use with the first amphibs, while the Korean used the surplus US Asw 2 with the Mk44 Phalanx. It is worth mentioning that all of the Japanese carriers got into the game for the Japanese, even the Korean and Vietnamese. But, the Japanese have a large number of AA defenses, including the 74mm. The Igla is a 3.7l variant of this AA gun. The 2S25 AS-45 has a 3.7 nozzle. Honestly, I don't see a difference. My only criticism is the 2S25 consumes 25% more ammunition, and the AS-105 is much less accurate with a shorter effective range. The advantage of the Igla is that it's lighter, and can be towed on the M2, while the M2 can't be towed with the 2S25 without considerable effort. But the weight of the Igla isn't always more than half the weight of the 2S25, but other times, it is twice the 2S25's weight. The 2S25 proved itself to be more reliable. There were more of them available. The Igla was a more expert weapon (for the early game), and the 2S25 could be made more skilled if used with a T-155 triple coaxial, a 105mm T-55, or a 120mm T-54. Each type of AB that was made would have improved this tank's playability, but not nearly enough for me to prefer it to the 2S25. The 2S25 was not really a great weapon until the late game, where it proved itself to have the best range and the best accuracy of all of the
