The presence of fragmented QRS complex (fQRS) patterns is an established marker of ischemia of the myocardium. Although this marker has been seen in the left coronary artery territory, its presence in the right coronary artery (RCA) territory has not been reported. This report describes two cases of RCA occlusion causing fQRS complexes. In one patient, a fQRS pattern preceded acute occlusion of a 90% stenosis in the RCA. The Q: Pascal's triangle proof The common proof for Pascal's triangle is by using the initial condition that the first element is 1. However it doesn't really provide an intuitive solution, as it has a few arguments. Can Pascal's triangle be proved by just using that the elements of $1, 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 13, 21, \dots$ sums to 1? If yes, how? A: Yeah, it is possible to prove Pascal's triangle without using any initial conditions. Notice the pattern: the numbers in the triangle are the numbers in the Fibonacci sequence, whose n th term is the sum of the previous n th and $(n-1)$ st terms. For instance, the third term of the Fibonacci sequence is 2 , the third term of the sequence of sums is $2+2=4$, so that means the third term of Pascal's triangle is 3 . Here is a pattern that you can observe: The n th term of the sequence a_n is the sum of the previous n and $(n-1)$ st terms of the Fibonacci sequence. If you can understand that then you can see that there are only two ways to get a given term of the sequence and it is actually pretty straight forward. You see that the sum of a sequence is a different sequence and therefore you get a third sequence by adding the n th term to the $(n-1)$ st term of the original sequence. Then, you can prove that when you take the sum of two sequences, you get the same sum as the original sequence which is Pascal's triangle.

Q: How to show the loading bar when accessing a request in Angularjs? I try to show the loading bar when accessing a restfull webservice. The problem is that the loading bar appears only after the request is finished. I would like to show it directly in the beginning of the request. This is what i do: `angular.module('RESTmodules').factory('Entity', function($http) { return { createEntity : function(option) { return $http.post('/api/entities', option);`
