Nucleic acid is an important class of drugs with potential widespread applications in the treatment of diseases and the treatment of infections in humans and other animals. Nucleic acid drugs include antisense oligonucleotides and siRNA (RNA interference) drugs. When these drugs are applied topically, they are taken up into cells of the target tissue by endocytosis. A nucleic acid drug that is taken up by an intracellular nucleic acid receptor will be capable of interacting with its intracellular target. The interaction will occur in the cell cytoplasm and may result in the activation of the cell death pathway. A nucleic acid drug that is taken up into cells by an extracellular receptor will be able to interact with its extracellular target and may be capable of activating the cell death pathway. P-glycoprotein (P-gp) is the main efflux pump for many clinically important drugs and nucleic acid drugs, both in vitro and in vivo. For example, major drugs, such as paclitaxel, doxorubicin, and daunorubicin, that are transported by P-gp are each known to be clinically active against a number of tumor types. In addition, accumulating evidence shows that nucleic acid drugs are also substrates for P-gp, and nucleic acid drugs delivered to a target tissue for treating the target tissue tend to be subject to efflux by P-gp and other efflux pumps in the target tissue. P-gp recognizes the drug as a substrate and pumps the drug out of the cell. A drug that is a substrate for P-gp is therefore typically excluded from various tissues, such as the central nervous system (CNS), and the blood-brain barrier (BBB). The exclusion of drugs from the brain is termed "central nervous system (CNS) side effects". The exclusion of drugs from the BBB is termed "intestinal toxicity". Mesenchymal stromal cells (MSCs) are a type of non-haematopoietic, multipotent cell that is often found in the bone marrow. The MSCs function as a structural support unit, maintain the haematopoietic stem cells and play a role in the repair of damaged tissues and organs, such as blood vessels, bone, cartilage, fat, bone marrow and muscle. In the treatment of disease or trauma, the stem cells may be genetically

Young Kids Hurt in Ball Aerospace Shooting at Space Flight Museum PICKERINGTON, Ohio - A young couple visiting the Mars-themed Space Flight Museum in the southeastern Ohio town of Pickerington was shot and injured Thursday night, leaving them both "unconscious" in the early hours of Friday, police said. "They're both fine," pickerington police Chief Mike Mierzwinski told reporters. "One is a woman, one is a man, 19-year-old woman and 16-year-old boy. Both were shot. They were both shot in the legs but not in any serious area." Police said in a statement posted to Facebook they were not looking for suspects but the incident remained under investigation. Mierzwinski said all those who were there at the time are "fine." "We were in [the] shooting gallery there and they were coming up to the museum and then suddenly they said something happened, they were shot, they were talking a little bit on the way over. But it was obviously very traumatic for them." Pickerington Mayor John Kitchen said it was unclear why someone would shoot the couple. "It could be anything. It could be anything. It could be someone getting kicked out," Kitchen told the Columbus Dispatch. The shooting happened at about 5:15 p.m. and the couple were able to walk from the shooting scene to the pickerington-area police department, about a block away. Mierzwinski said the couple was a good distance away when they heard the gunshots. "They told me she's pretty shaken up and she's pretty much in shock," Mierzwinski said. "And he's a little bit shaken up because it's their first time going in that facility. So that's pretty much it." Mierzwinski said the couple has not been able to provide any other details. "They can't recall what the suspect looked like, what they were wearing, they can't give us any other details. But for sure, they do remember coming inside. Once inside, they were here for a while," Mierzwinski said. The museum, which is part of the National Air and Space Museum, said on its website that it was closed because of the shooting. "The National Air and Space Museum is saddened to announce that an incident occurred while the Museum was open on Thursday evening,"
