From time to time, people tend to make simple typos which may lead to serious consequences, for instance when they type: "Replace" "Resize" "Replace with" "Replace" "Replace with" and so on. This is the reason why most Windows users are familiar with the assistance of a certain keyboard shortcut. KeyMacro is a simple tool for Windows users that helps them in correcting such typing mistakes. The utility uses an algorithm and searches for the last typed characters on the keyboard, based on which it is able to propose replacements for them. However, even if it can help you eliminate several typos, it is not going to provide you with a great accuracy, as the suggested values are only based on the last three characters typed by the user. Nevertheless, it is really a simple tool that even the most inexperienced users can use to correct a few typos. Simply load the app into your computer, make a few clicks, and you will notice the program showing an animation while it is analyzing your data. At the end, a list of potential replacements is going to appear, informing you that it was not possible to determine what the text has been, or even that it will not be suggested because there is no possibility to determine which character you have typed. KeyMacro is a neat app that may be used by people who are in a hurry and want to check several typos quickly. The response time is satisfactory, and it is a good alternative to using a dictionary. KeyMacro is not the best app to use in case you want a more accurate solution, but it is surely worth trying out.
